The wounded man I found was now quite well, and I enr deavoured to impress upon his mind that he owed his life entirely to my exertions, which he verily believed; fer he declared that I should never want a friend while he was on board. Having performed this office, I dressed my own wounds, which. I found less painful, and assuming a more favourable aspect. The captain came in and examined them, and expressed a hope that I should soon be able to make the sail and go up aloft, which I told him I should be able to do in three or four days. He then questioned me on the subject of the magistrate s disaster, and told me that I must pay every possible attention to him, as he was a very worthy man, and his best friend. In order to lull his suspicions, I pretended un- willingness to go so frequently ashore, and recommended him to send for a medical man; but he over-ruled my objections, and said that he was quite confident in my skill. On this day he Mas perfectly sober, which was seldom the case, and he began to display a feeling of kindness towards me, remarked I must be fatigued, and recommended me to take a few hours sleep-- a recommendation that! willingly followed, and slept till I was called up to dinner. After dinner I tried to continue making the sail, with which...
