Brand New Book ***** Print on Demand *****.Excerpt from Studies About the Kathasaritsagara In days of yore, when Civa, the Lord of the Universe, was alone with his beloved wife, the daughter of Himavant, and caressed her, she asked him to tell her some charming new tale. For Indian gods and goddesses are as fond of tales as Indian men and women. The Supreme God, however reluctantly and after an unsuccessful expedient to acquit himself with little, entered upon a story of immense length and of an extraordinary charm. Parvati wishing to keep the whole of the pleasure to be procured by that wonderful catena of tales to herself, shut the door and ordered Nandin, Civa's bull, to withhold any person whatsoever from coming in. In the meanwhile one of Civa's most beloved Ganas, Puspadanta his name, went on to see his master. Being forbidden the entrance, he succeeded by dint of magic power to penetrate unseen within the presence of Civa and Parvati and to overhear that new and delightful story about the seven sovereigns of the Air-spirits (Vidyadharas).
