When solution has been effected 30 cubic centimetres of hot water are added, followed by 13 cubic centimetres of caustic soda solution (sp. gr. 1-27.) The colouring matter is dissolved by the soda, the intensity of the tint being times that possessed by an acid solution. The liquid is diluted to 60 cubic centimetres and allowed to stand 10 minutes. It is then filtered through a dry filter and compared with a standard which has been treated in a similar manner. Mr. Stead uses a special form of chromometer for the comparisons. Eggertz recommends the use of 1-5 cubic centimetres of nitric acid when the percentage of carbon is small, and insists upon the necessity of diluting the solution with at least an equal measure of water before comparing, so as to destroy the greenish tint. CHAPTER VII. THE DETERMINATION OF CHROMIUM.
